How to Lead When You're Not in Charge

Vikas Surani
Global Vice President – Growth | TEDx Speaker | IIMA

November 24, 2024

Hello, Curious Minds!

Have you ever wondered how some people seem to lead effortlessly, even without a title?

True leadership is not about authority—it's about influence, action, and creating value.

This week, let's explore how you can lead when you're not in charge, guided by my own leadership learnings and actionable insights.

1. Shift Your Mindset: Think Like a Leader

Leadership starts with responsibility, not rank.

- Focus on creating value for your team by solving problems and supporting their success.
- See challenges as opportunities to step up and contribute.

2. Build Influence Through Trust and Expertise

Trust is the foundation of influence.

- Be dependable and consistent—your word matters.
 - Cultivate expertise in your area. People naturally follow those who add value and inspire confidence.

3. Lead by Example

Your actions set the tone.

- Show up with a positive attitude and take ownership of outcomes.
 - Don't wait for permission—be proactive and drive change through accountability and action.

4. Communicate with Clarity and Purpose

Communication is key to leadership.

- Align your ideas with the team's or organization's goals.
 - Practice active listening and empathy—it strengthens connections and fosters collaboration.

5. Use Collaboration as a Leadership Tool

Leadership isn't a solo act.

- Be the connector who aligns efforts and brings people together.
 - Recognize and celebrate others' contributions to build goodwill and encourage teamwork.

My Leadership Moment

Early in my career, I found myself part of a cross-functional engagement that lacked direction. While I had no formal authority, I stepped up to define the problem, align the team, and create a plan of action.

Instead of waiting for someone to take charge, I focused on collaboration, solutions, and momentum. The results? The team exceeded expectations—and I learned that leadership is about impact, not position.

Moments like these solidified my belief in leading with clarity, accountability, and empathy.

Your Turn to Lead

Leadership is a mindset, not a title. This week, think about where you can step up and lead:

- Solve a recurring problem or challenge.
- Take ownership of a task or initiative.

- Support and inspire your colleagues to achieve shared goals.

Curiosity fuels leadership—when we step up, we grow and inspire others to do the same. I'd love to hear your stories! Share your leadership moments with me, and let's keep inspiring one another.

Until next time, stay curious, keep showing up, Vikas

Superb articulation Vikas!
My two cents-
Considering today's competitive and bit of a political corporate world, one should first try and earn trust of seniors and juniors alike! This makes is easy to create a conducive environment for a leader. ...more
